OUR BIRTHDAY GIFT TO YOU

o time would transform Kansas City more than the year 1933. This university opened its doors, as did the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art and the Kansas City Philharmonic (now the Symphony). The depths of the Great Depression only spurred the citizens of this frontier city to think bigger, investing time, resources and energy into what are now cultural icons of today's metropolis.

As we celebrate UMKC's first nine decades, we wanted to give you two gifts. One is a look back at our past. Turn to the center of your magazine to find a romp through the last 80 years. It's certainly not a comprehensive history, but we hope you will enjoy the highlights and memories.

Our other gift is this issue, filled with and dedicated to our current student body. We asked them to tell us who they are, and nearly 1,500 undergraduates responded with personal stories and opinions on everything from religion, politics and money to their relationships with their parents. Major thanks to the Division of Student Affairs and Enrollment Management, which assisted in the development and administration of the survey — modeled on an undergraduate survey conducted by Dartmouth College. Many thanks also to the Office of Institutional Research for its help in executing the survey and providing the analysis of responses.

We hope you will be surprised and inspired by those following in your footsteps. Happy birthday to UMKC and cheers to the more than 100,000 graduates of the past 80 years.

Readers respond to the Spring issue.

Alma mater pride

I just finished reading my Spring 2013 issue of Perspectives and wanted to share how impressed I am with the magazine. I currently serve as the department chair of Biology and Environmental Health at Missouri Southern State University in Joplin, Mo., and recently returned to the Hospital Hill campus with my undergraduate students.

While my time at UMKC was a fundamental part of my professional career, I now have the unique opportunity to share with my students the many wonderful opportunities UMKC provides after graduation is complete. I am proud to be a Roo and am grateful for the professional and personal achievements where UMKC played a key part.

- Jennifer (Crane) Dennis, B.A. '02

Art mismatch

I had this wonderful warm and fuzzy feeling while reading the interesting article about pets and their relationships with owners ("Puppy love"), until I read the sidebar "The Wide World of Pets." Silhouettes of six common pets were shown; unfortunately two of the silhouettes don't match the labels. Someone should be reminded that graphics should involve not only artistic ability, but also a basic reality check. - Shirley Koch, B.A. '66, M.A. '71

Mascot's origin

I enjoyed the "Puppy love" story in the last issue of Perspectives; however, I was surprised that you didn't mention in "Kasey revealed" that the UMKC Debate Team's lack of a mascot in the 1930s was a reason that Kasey the Kangaroo was picked to be the university's mascot.

- Amy Foster, B.A. '07

Remembering Megan Cramer

It's quite striking to me that there was absolutely no mention of Megan Cramer (J.D. '94) and her passing from the nationally covered Country Club Plaza explosion in the spring issue. She was a UMKC student and one of the founders of the UMKC Gay and Lesbian Student Alliance in 1990. I'm astounded that no public notice was mentioned in the "Passings" section.

- Reese Aaron Isbell, B.S. '92

The UMKC family was deeply saddened by the death of Megan Cramer. Although the magazine had already gone to print, a story about Megan and her legacy was featured on UMKC's homepage at info.umkc.edu/news/remembering-megan-cramer.

Can we quote you on that?

SCHOOL APPOINTS NEW DEAN, CHANGES NAME

After a three-month search, nationally acclaimed educator Ann Cary was named dean of the School of Nursing and Health Studies.

Cary, who served as director of the Loyola University New Orleans School of Nursing, succeeds Lora Lacey-Haun, who served as "Her experience and leadership in nursing and health care education will help guide the school into the future as it continues to evolve and expand to meet the demand for health professionals," says Executive Vice Chancellor and Provost Gail Hackett.

Earlier this year, the school also added Health Studies to its name to reflect the growth of its offerings. The school has expanded beyond nursing programs to meet broader health care needs. -Stacy Downs

Twice as nice: Campus opens two new buildings

n addition to all the new freshman faces, there are new spaces on the Volker campus this fall.

During the university's events surrounding Founders' Week (see page 32), UMKC will host a special ceremony to celebrate its newest structures — the Henry W. Bloch Executive Hall for Entrepreneurship and Innovation and the Miller Nichols Learning Center.

The state-of-theart Executive Hall for Entrepreneurship and Innovation, built with a $32 million gift from Henry Bloch, stands adjacent to the current Bloch School building and houses graduate, executive and entrepreneurship programs.

BNIM Architects designed the new building to maximize "experiential learning." Tables and chairs in the fully wired classrooms are on wheels, allowing students to roll easily into groups for collaboration, while design, behavioral, prototyping, finance and innovation labs offer spaces for active learning.

The Hall's three-story atrium is the social hub of the building, with a tiered amphitheater and giant 16-screen video wall. Three skylights also flood the hall's atrium with natural light.

"These two projects are linchpins to meeting our enrollment growth goal of 20,000 students by 2020," said Chancellor Leo E. Morton. "They do far more than just give us more room. These are state-of-the-art facilities that will make our campus even more attractive to prospective students and demonstrate our commitment to this community as Kansas City's university." -Gail Borelli

Changing a culture

asketball fans can look for a ferocious, pressing defense and a speedier style of play when the UMKC Roos defense and a speedier style or play take the court for their first season in the Western Athletic Conference (WAC).

If that's reminiscent of the most recent NCAA tournament, it's no accident. New head coach Kareem Richardson was an assistant on the Louisville team whose stellar defense helped it win the national title in April.

And while the WAC features a faster, more "athletic" style of play, the biggest change Roo fans will see will be cultural, Richardson said.

"The style of play will be more up-tempo, especially on the defensive end. We'll be pressing more, trying to create turnovers," he says. "In the short term, we want to establish our culture of being a defensive-minded team that takes care of the backboards. Over the long term, the goal is to cultivate that culture into conference championships."

He says he's hoping to generate an even higher level of alumni passion for the program.

"We've added an alum, Spencer Johnson — UMKC's all-time leading rebounder — to the staff. When you get an alum on staff who has total belief in the program and in the community, that can only help us to create a winning culture, which is what our alumni expect and deserve."

Several highly touted recruits will be among the new faces next season, including two Kansas City-area players: Frank Williams and Martez Harrison. Both are rated as three-star recruits by rivals.com.

"We do want to keep players with local ties here, and have people in the community recognize the guys out on the floor," Richardson says. "But ultimately we want the best, highestcharacter kids we can find, no matter where they come from."

Coming off a national championship season, Richardson says he intends to lay the groundwork for an NCAA Tournament berth at UMKC. It's a special feeling he wants to relive and share with the players and fans.

"You hear people talk about a surreal feeling. I never understood what they meant. Now I do," Richardson says.

And he says he believes a similar feeling can build here.

"There are schools that are not from BCS conferences, but compete at the highest level. They give programs like ours hope." -John Martellaro

e recently asked our students
— the digitally savvy, super tweeters and texters, app lovin', "privacy what?" Millennial Generation — to weigh in and tell us about, well, themselves.

The university has come a long way since the entering class of 1933. More than 100,000 students have come and gone, and while it's fun to reflect back on what's been, we thought it was high time to focus on the 10,626 students who currently make up our thriving undergraduate student body.

To learn what drives them and defines them, Perspectives asked students to participate in an anonymous online survey.

Nearly 1,500 students weighed in, answering a 50-plus questionnaire on everything from love and finances to their parents and future plans. We discovered their favorite TV shows and their preferred musical genres and even tapped into their greatest fears.

In addition to the survey, we interviewed nearly 60 students from all disciplines to gauge their perceptions on where they are and where they're going. And even after 80 years, a common thread continues to tie our current students to the entering class of 1933 — the dream to succeed.

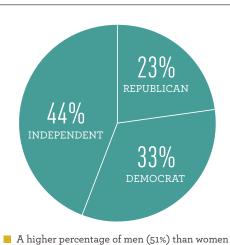

We hope you'll enjoy getting to know the next generation of Roos as much as we did.

India's Walt Disney

Alumnus created country's most popular cartoon.

ajiv Chilakalapudi (M.S. '97) can't even remember the number of times network executives rejected his idea for a cartoon series about a cheerful, intelligent little boy named Chhota Bheem.

Chilakalapudi, the founder and CEO of Green Gold, India's leading animation company, pitched the first Chhota Bheem pilot in 2004. When it was rejected, his team revamped the show. Their second pilot was ready the following year, but was also rejected. They revamped it again. And again, and again, never losing hope.

To learn more about India's No. 1 animation service, visit greengold.tv.

All along, Check it out Chilakalapudi and his team saw what the network executives didn't — that children would fall in love with the show's fast pace, bright colors and frequent songs. They'd admire Chhota for using his strength to protect those in need.

When the series finally did get picked up, it was a happy accident. The station had originally signed a different cartoon but it fell behind in production, leaving the station to call Green Gold.

That phone call was the start of a mutually beneficial relationship, Chilakalapudi says. Not only did it save the struggling animation studio, but it gave the station a wildly popular cartoon. Soon after it debuted in 2008, Chhota Bheem became India's top animated show, with more than 150 aired episodes to date. Since its first episode, the show has spun off several short animations and, recently, two fulllength feature films.

"The rest is history in the Indian animation space," Chilakalapudi said.

Chilakalapudi received the School of Computing and Engineering's 2013 Alumni Achievement

Award in April, and during his visit to campus, he shared his journey of success with an audience of SCE students, faculty and staff.

After his speech, Chilakalapudi played a clip of the cartoon on the classroom's projection screen. The audience of adults sat captivated by the bright, actionpacked cartoon that played out before them. Sure, there was a language barrier, but jokes were universal.

The scene came full circle. Years ago, when Chilakalapudi attended UMKC, he recalled being at a friend's house when the friend's child was watching The Lion King. Although he'd always considered himself "too manly" for cartoons, Chilakalapudi said he couldn't take his eyes off the screen. He was an adult, drawn to the movie's bright colors and artistic animation.

It was part of an interest that had been snowballing since he first arrived at UMKC. It was during his campus tour that he first learned Walt Disney had penned the original Kasey Kangaroo.

favorite character, Chhota Bheem.

With that, Chilakalapudi's interest in the legendary animator grew. Later, while working at the Miller Nichols Library, he stumbled upon a few books about Disney and spent his off-hours poring over those books, taking in every detail.

Those experiences helped make him who he is today, he says.

"It took me a long time to figure out what to do, but it all started at UMKC," he says. "UMKC played a very, very important role in my life."

Chilakalapudi and Green Gold have come a long way since the years of rejected pilots. Today, Chilakalapudi enjoys a level of success that once looked unreachable. More than once, he has rejected buyout offers.

For now, his sights are set on growth. "So far, Green Gold has been India's Disney," Chilakalapudi says, "but I would like to take it to the international level." -Kristin Pitts

Looking back

Student from first class reflects on time at UKC.

ven at age 97, Jane (Marshall)
Campbell frequently finds herself reminiscing about the University of Kansas City (UKC), UMKC's predecessor.
As a student in the entering class of 1933,
Campbell says her time at the university remains one of her fondest memories.

"The university has always held a special place in my heart," she says. "It's hard to believe that it's been 80 years since its founding."

Whenever she feels the urge to recall her time at UKC, she pulls out the scrapbook her mother compiled. Within the book's tattered bindings are pictures and news stories about UKC's first years.

Campbell's father, John. A. Marshall, a prominent Kansas City businessman during the late '20s, worked with the city's Chamber of Commerce and local officials on the university's establishment.

"My parents wanted me to obtain an education. However, when I was ready for college we were in the midst of the Great Depression and money was tight," Campbell says. "My father was a huge supporter of the university, because he knew it would bring advantages to the city and provide me with a well-rounded education."

While most of Campbell's friends attended the University of Kansas or the University of Missouri, she attended UKC, which was within walking distance of her family's home.

By happy coincidence, the university was ready to open its doors at the same time Campbell was ready to start her education. Although her father had a vested interest in the university, Campbell says he didn't realize it would be ready in time for her to join the first class. He was pleased she stayed close to home.

Upon entry at UKC, Campbell was interested in pursing medicine. But with a limited number of women in the medical field, she opted to pursue a degree in home economics, as her mother believed it would be too difficult for her to find work after graduation.

"My home economics degree was a good decision though, because I got a job right out of college," she says.

Among the 250 students in UKC's inaugural class, Campbell says she had the opportunity to meet a lot of people and make new friends. Between attending class in Dickey Mansion (now known as Scofield Hall) and the carriage house and spending countless hours in the mansion's greenhouse for lab work, she also found time for social activities.

She says her favorite memories are of the faculty, who all held Ph.D.s in their selected fields. She also recalls the student-led walkout during the spring of 1934 in which students protested the firing of two professors.

"I was a real rebel, but it was exciting," she laughs. "My father was just happy I didn't make the paper."

After two years at UKC, Campbell transferred to the University of Kansas to finish her studies.

"My mom wanted me to go away for growth," Campbell says. "KU was so different from UKC. The classes at KU were bigger and it didn't have the same feeling of closeness. I enjoyed my time at KU and had some really good professors, but most of the professors I had at UKC were better."

After graduating from KU, Campbell began working for a local gas service company. She moved to Texas two years later after marrying Albert Cook, an officer in the Navy. After being stationed in Texas, California and Virginia, the couple settled in Arlington County, Va., with their three children. After the children were grown and her husband's retirement, they ended up in Clarke County in Virginia.

After Cook's death in 1983, Campbell remarried and spent the next 21 years traveling across the United States in a motorhome with her husband, Douglas.

Even throughout her travels, Campbell returned to Kansas City often to visit family and the university. In 1983, she visited campus to celebrate the university's 50th anniversary.

"It was very exciting to come back and see so many people I knew," she says.

And although Campbell hasn't visited Kansas City since her brother John's death in 2003, she continues to keep a close eye on UMKC.

"I hardly recognize it now," she says.

"It's been amazing to see the school's transformation over the years and its impact on the community."

Now as the university celebrates its 80th anniversary, Campbell says she's been looking through her scrapbook more than usual.

"I pulled it out recently and shared it with my son who was visiting," she says. "I look back at my time at UKC very fondly. It was exciting to be part of that first class. I may not have graduated from UKC, but it remains a very special place to me." –Kara Petrovic

It's a suite setup

A look at the evolution of UMKC's housing.

It goes without saying that today's student housing is a far cry from 40 years ago. And while housing for the Millennial Generation is equipped with the same amenities they've grown up with — technology, privacy and the common conveniences of the 21st century — some things remain the same ... late-night laughs and unforgettable memories.

by KARA PETROVIC

- 1. On the heels of World War II, out-of-town students and cadets occupied Epperson House until the four-story Men's Residence Hall, commonly known as Cherry Street Hall, opened in 1957 to accommodate 270 students.
- 2. Each room in the "modern" air-conditioned Cherry Street Hall was equipped with twin beds, desks and chairs, as well as bookshelves and lamps. But students even then were required to supply their own bed linens and towels.
- 3. Women invaded Cherry Street in 1958. An alarm system on the outside of the entry door protected the 21 women who occupied the fourth floor. Women were expected to be in their rooms by 11 p.m. Sunday— Thursday and by 1 a.m. on Friday and Saturday.
- 4. Although radios and electric clocks were allowed in the rooms in the 1950s, television sets were not. However, the university provided TVs in the hall's lounge areas for recreational purposes.

Students now choose between Oak Street Hall and Johnson Hall (5), which offer semi-suites with private baths, or Oak Place Apartments (6), which provides the luxury of apartment-style living at an affordable price.
